The year 2015 is a very important milestone for ASEAN as we establish an ASEAN Community in December. Its advent should spur the regional organisation to consolidate its priorities towards a more people-oriented and people-centred ASEAN. At the same time, ASEAN is now also entering a new era of transformation where it must realise its potential to become a dynamic, innovative and visionary organisation that is proactive as well as able to project its presence globally while responding to global challenges in a timely manner, in line with the Bali Concord III.

Following the High Level Task Force’s Recommendations on Strengthening the ASEAN Secretariat and Reviewing of ASEAN Organs, this Guide to ASEAN Practices and Protocol is meant to streamline practice across the three Pillars. It is hoped that this Guide will simplify the process of convening ASEAN meetings and provide general guidance to Member States. While ASEAN Member States are encouraged to follow this Guide for consistency, they have the flexibility to adjust as deemed necessary.

As many will attest, ASEAN meetings are synonymous to meaningful outcomes. They provide strategic direction not only within ASEAN but also for its partners, be it Dialogue Partners or External Parties. Managing and organising these meetings is thus an integral part of Member States’ responsibilities when they host or chair meetings, so having a standardised guide to ensure common practises are observed is thus essential.

In light of the above, I am pleased to see this Guide published to serve as a reference point for all ASEAN stakeholders. I take note that a lot of work, effort and time have been spent in finalising this Guide and I would like to take this opportunity to thank those that were involved.
